Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Tuesday 23 Mar 2021

UK Outlook for Sunday 28 Mar 2021 to Tuesday 6 Apr 2021:
Remaining mainly unsettled for most to end the weekend with rain bands sinking south across the UK and will be very windy in the north. More settled in the south, very mild at times to start next week. There are signals for a significant area of low pressure focused over the northwest as we move into April, bringing heavy rain or showers, alongside strong winds which may sink south across the UK into early April. However, the likelihood is greater for high pressure to build across the UK giving more settled conditions for most. Temperatures are likely to start cooler in the north with mild conditions in the south, becoming very mild at times, however this may be tempered by wind and rain, trending back towards average conditions into April.
